

Sterisol Industry Story

The choice of skin care for the specific needs of the metal industry

In the steel industry, many employees get their hands and arms visibly dirty in their work. It's important to choose products that make you clean in one go without drying out the skin. It is one of the many reasons why industries choose Sterisol as a skin care supplier.

Anyone who has been in a metal industry knows that there are rather special conditions. In addition to the fact that it can get quite dirty and that you are exposed to oils, there are often quite large temperature differences. Many of the Swedish metal industries are located up north and during mining it can be raw, cold and damp. Compared to smelters and finished product production, the temperature at the workplace can be very high. These are conditions that often eat away at the skin. If you start to get cracks and become dry, it is more difficult to get clean, and then it can become a vicious circle. Many of our customers usually tell us about the importance of an effective abrasive soap so that you only need to wash yourself once, to get clean. The effectiveness combined with the gentleness to the skin is something you associate with Sterisol.

Sterisol is associated with knowledge, sustainability and skin health, but many industries believe that they choose us simply because our products work the best

The right product in the right place

There are a few products that have become synonymous with skin care in industries: The abrasive soap, the skin cream and the shower soap. Thanks to the fact that we have worked so closely with the majority of the Swedish industries since the 1970s, we have been able to gain an invaluable insight into the needs. Many of our customers emphasize the importance of setting up creme by the wash basins so that it is close at hand. This allows you to prevent skin problems and infections, and provides sustainable skin care. In all the years we have supplied skin care to industries, we have been recognized for delivering gentle and preservative-free skin care with a pronounced ambition of sustainability.
